

The new central station in Berlin was opened on the 28th May, 2006 in connection with the zoo tunnel, the distant railway stations for mineral spring and south cross as well as the regional railway stations Potsdam place (underground), spinster moor and light field the east. The regional traffic and the long-distance traffic of the road thereby got beside the east west direction, in addition, a subterranean regional traffic facility and distant traffic facility between the north south. An Umsteigemöglichkeit between east west and the north south was established in the central station. Most trains which start Berlin from northern or southern direction are escorted about the new north south route about the distance to light field the east, south cross, Potsdam place, central station or about mineral spring or about spinster moor to Spandau.
